The Importance of Family

June 2012

Volume 9, Issue 11

A family unit is the unit which builds up a person's personality. How you behave and what you become in life is very much dependent on your family life. The way your family members deal with you has a life long effect on your personality. The family unit is the most important part of your life as you grow into adulthood. Children are closer to their parents and siblings compared to other people in the world. As child grow up they find good friends, spouses, their own kids and colleagues to share their lives with. Children who have a sound family background and who belong to a family unit with strong family ties are almost always happier. The life with your family is very important as it plays a major role in your development into the person you will become. The goals that are set in your life are very much dependent on the life you have with your family. Family life is also important in that it gives you your strength as a person. Families who have a well settled family life are generally more successful. Those who come from broken families are generally less confident and more negative in life. When families dissolve (divorce), it is usually the children that suffer the most. Children from broken homes usually have to suffer through their fears and insecurities. As family life plays a very important role in shaping children, lack of security in your family life can make you an unstable person. In today's society, the family unit is not being considered as important by the people it used to be. Family life adds a sense of responsibility in your personality. Children who are not able to experience this usually have not had a very rewarding family life growing up into adulthood. Thus, we each need to step back and reflect on our childhood as well as how we are structuring ourselves in our family today.

Quote of the month "In life, if you want to fly like an eagle...then develop untiring wings."
