Triangle of Responsibility

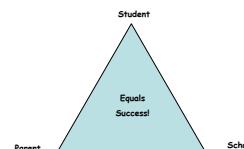

May 2008

Volume 5, Issue 10

As we come to the conclusion of the 2007 - 2008 school year, I am reminded of one of my favorite illustrations that I call "Triangle of Responsibility." It is a rather simple concept that I like to use with my students throughout the school year. I have referred to it many times over the years with both students and parents. If you envision an equilateral triangle (a triangle in which all three angles are equal in measure and all three sides have the same length) and at the three vertices you would find the words: student, parent and school. When this "Triangle of Responsibility" is formed, it should equal success! Provided that each angle does what it is responsible for. In today's society, this is imperative to insure that a child will be successful not only within the school setting, but throughout his/her lifetime! Without each identity (student, parent and school) doing their part/responsibility, the amount of success that could be received by a student may be limited. The Triangle of Responsibility can be fashioned to represent many facets of and individuals life. One just needs to be creative and allow their imagination the freedom to make the illustration work for them.
